FIRST EXAM (100 POINTS)

American Social Problems: 1877 – 1920

1. List, describe, and critically evaluate the most significant myths that play a role in creating and/or maintaining American social problems. Be sure to address the function of the myth (usefulness), the accuracy of the myth, and the sources of expressions of the myth.

2. How does sociology explain the emergence of heroes and heroines? Using specific examples, list, describe, and critically evaluate the most significant ideas and concepts used by sociology to explain the rise and impact of such personalities.

3. Why and how is the study of deviance essential to the study of social problems? List and describe the most important characteristics of deviants and deviance and their relationship to specific social problems. Is a deviance-focus sufficient for describing, explaining and predicting social problems?

4. The social health of the nation and the economic health of the nation are not always the same. Using specific examples, examine the most significant reasons why and how this comes to be the case. What social and psychological mechanisms explain the acceptance/rejection of discrepancies when they arise?

5. The creation and resolution of social problems are always contingent on historical conditions and possibilities. List and describe the most significant social problems of this period. Critically evaluate the historically-specific barriers to and opportunities for addressing these problems. Be sure to include a minimum of three of the following themes in your analysis: a) cultural assumptions and values; b) economic organization; c) social conditions and opportunities; d) institutional organization; e) demographic characteristics; f) mobility; g) technological development.

- Use the ‘Ten Criteria’ for grading essay exams.
- Graphics accompanying responses are REQUIRED. This must include cited use (and/or expansion) of graphics from class dialogue.
- Essay breakdown should approximate one-third of each of the following: readings (including Blackboard), class dialogue, and original thinking (not opinion).
- Instructor approval is required for use of all additional sources.

Practice ‘Learned Resourcefulness.’ Avoid procrastination, develop appropriate help-seeking behaviors, ask questions, learn to recognize & utilize resources (e.g. the library, fellow students, the instructor, tutoring, and study groups), and embrace realistic goals & priorities.
SECOND EXAM (100 POINTS)

American Social Problems: 1920 - 1960

1. Eitzen & Zinn suggest that American cities have been victimized and abandoned since W.W. II. List, describe and critically evaluate the most significant causes and consequences of this victimization and abandonment. With America becoming a majority urban society only in 1925, why did this happen so suddenly to the world’s richest society?

2. Trace the evolution and devolution of work in America between 1920 and 1960. Be sure to interpret the changing forms of alienation, dangerous working conditions, the rise and fall of unions, and the inequalities found in American work. Who/what has been responsible for these conditions?

3. Why have great myths surrounded the “American family”? Assess the most significant myths about the family in light of the historical developments between 1920 and 1960. Be sure to assess the crucial role of economic change and its impact on the family.

4. List, describe and critically evaluate the most significant transformations and challenges faced by education by 1960. Has education adequately served its intended function?

5. World War II, the Cold War, and the perception of threats to national security reached dangerous levels between 1920 and 1960. Describe and demonstrate how these conditions transformed American society from a largely non-militarized and isolated nation into the world’s ‘pistol-packing preacher.’ What have been the costs of this change in terms of the role of the American people?

FINAL EXAM (200 POINTS)

American Social Problems: 1960 - Present

1. Many experts argue that American institutions are in crisis, that prior approaches to social problems were ill informed at best, and that current problems require an entirely new approach. List, describe, and critically evaluate the most significant evidence supporting and/or refuting this point of view.

2. Although many problems from the past persist in contemporary American culture, there have been gains and improvements. List, describe, and critically evaluate the most significant ‘successes’ of recent decades. Your responses should include the following: what groups have benefited, where, when, and how these changes came about.

3. Some experts have argued that a revolution in values will be necessary to address some of the most intractable problems in American culture. List, describe, and critically evaluate the most significant of the intractable problems, the value transformation that would be necessary for addressing them, and the factors (+/–) influencing this turn of events.

4. Much of what took place in the 1960’s and immediately thereafter has been called a ‘stalled revolution.’ What is meant by the term ‘stalled revolution?’ Who and/or where are the most significant indications of this ‘stall.’

5. Some believe that most cultures are, for different reasons, equally unprepared to address the challenges of the future because the future demands a new kind of American and a new kind of human being. List, describe, and critically evaluate the most significant reasons for making this assertion and the kind of characteristics that this new kind of human being would need to embrace and represent.

6. American society is characterized by both unprecedented and enduring social problems. List, describe, and critically evaluate the most significant novel and enduring social problems in American society. Be sure to address a) the most significant barriers to the resolution of these problems and b) ways in which other societies have successfully addressed similar problems.
